In Athens, ere its sun of fame had set, Midst pomp and show the gazing crowds were met, Intent for ever upon something new, The mimic wonders of the stage to view.

Eo where the wide-extended circus spreads In gathered ranks its sea of living heads, Ranged in close order, rising row on row, The void arens claims the space below.

The seats were filled; but ere the show began, A stranger entered—'twas an aged man; A while he sought a place with aspect mild; The posished yound Athenians sat and smiled, Eyed his confusion with a side-long glance, But kept their seats, nor rose on his advance.

O for a burning blush of deeper hue
To mark the shame of that self-glorious crew;
How poor the produce of fair learning's tree,
Tabt hears no fruits of sweet hamility:
The growth of aris and sciences, how vain
In hearts that feel not for another's pain:

Not so the Spartan youth, whose simple school instilled the plain but salutary rule Of kindness, and whose honest souls preferred Truth to display—performance to a word.

These Spartan youths had their appointed place, Apart from Atticus, distinguished race, And rose with one accord, intent to prove To honoured age their duty and their love; Ner did a Spartan youth his seat resume Till the old man found due and fitting room.

Then came the sentence of reproof and praise, Stamped with the steraness of the ancient days, For, standing full amid the assembled crowd, The venerable stranger cried aloud: "The Athenians learn their duty well, but lo! The Spartans practise what the Athenians know."

The words were good, and in a virtuous cause;
They justly earned a nation's glad applause;
But we have surer words of precept given
In God's own book, the words that came from heaven—
"Be kind, be courteous, be all honour shown,"
"Seek others' welfare rather than thine own."

No Paradise on Earth.—Ah, believer, it is only heaven that is above all winds, storms and tempests; God did not east man out of Paradise, that he might be able to find himself another Paradise in this world.

Nature has strange ways of doing the most beautiful things. Out of the oozy earth, the mud and rain of early Spring, come the most delicate of flowers, their white leaves born out of the dirt, as unsoiled and pure as if they had bloomed in the garden of Paradise.

RATHER BEAUTIFUL - In the Atlantic Monthly a story now being published, thus characterizes marriage:

"That delicious process of the tuning of two souls to each other, string by string, not without little half-pleasing discords now and then, when some chord in one or the other proves to be over strained or over-taxed, but always approaching nearer to harmony, until they become at last as two instruments with a single voice."

That you in return will re-treat, Jubal E.

But the re-treat he gave all ended in running:
For wine that is good Phil, I am a great sticker,
But I think of the two, you're proved the best licker;
When of Yankees I next find that I am in need,
I'll avoid Sherry-dan and tey and take Meade.

AN OYSTER CATCHING A SPARROW .- A very singular incident occurred recently, on the premises of Mr. Potter, fishmonger, Dale-end, Birmingham. A neighbor, passing through the yard, observed a sparrow fluttering in a frantic manner on the top of a beap of oyster-shells, as though struggling to release itself from the unpleasant detention. He found that the leg of the poor bird had been caught firmly in the grip of a young oyster, which was attached to the outside of one of the discarded shells. He at once took his prisoner into Mr. Potter's shop, where the singular bird-trap was opened with a knife, and the bird released. It is supposed that the oyster had opened its pearly itw for air, and that the feathered wanderer, whilst hopping merrily past, accidentally but too surely " put his foot in it."
